Summary:

It is very difficult to understand the uproar caused by the French government's decision to ban the burkini. This was a reaction to the chaos and turmoil caused by the Islamic fundamentalist sect in the Muslim world and in Europe.

The fundamentalists are the ones who reject participation in the 21st century. They prefer to isolate themselves in seventh century ideas and dress; despite that no one is denying them the right to practice their religion in private. They don't have the right, however, to invade the public space and impose their ideology and belief system represented by their dress.

Any dress is a culmination of a social experience and a representation of its core values. The fashion worn in the 21st century reflects the progress of our thoughts on equality, human rights, and women's rights.
