Summary:

"Anti-Semitism is not the business of the Jews, it is everyone's business. The French, whose democratic maturity has been measured after each Islamist attack, are living a tragic paradox. Their country has become the theater of deadly anti-Semitism. This terror spreads, provoking both popular condemnation and a media silence that the recent white march has helped break.

When a Prime Minister at the National Assembly platform declares, to the applause of the whole country, that France without the Jews, it is no longer France, it is not a beautiful consoling phrase but a solemn warning: our European history, and particularly French, for geographical, religious, philosophical, legal reasons, is deeply linked to various cultures among which Jewish thought is decisive. In our recent history, eleven Jews have been murdered - and some tortured - because Jews, by radical Islamists.
