Summary:

No one has ever been prosecuted for membership of the UK's 'most dangerous Islamist group' [8] despite followers launching numerous terror attacks [9], it can be revealed. Supporters of Anjem [10]Choudary [10]'s al-Muhajiroun (ALM) organisation carried out atrocities including the London Bridge attack [11], 7/7 bombings and murder of Lee Rigby [12], while others fought for Isis [13], al-Qaeda [14] and the Taliban [15]abroad. The government banned ALM as a terrorist group in 2006, making membership a criminal offence punishable by up to 10 years in prison. But a senior counterterror officer admitted that despite police identifying 600 current or former associates, none of them have been prosecuted for membership.

Yet not one of them has been prosecuted. In the London Bridge jihad attack, "suspects had been arrested but not charged." Meanwhile, "more than a dozen people were prosecuted for membership of the neo-Nazi terrorist group National Action." Why the disparity? Because the authorities can safely prosecute neo-Nazis without fearing that such prosecutions will bring them charges of "racism" and "Islamophobia." But the Muslim community in Britain has them so cowed and intimidated that they don't dare move against jihadis.
