Summary:

We've been opposing non-stun slaughter for decades but the release of new statistics brings fresh light to this crucial topic. In September 2017, the Food Standards Agency (FSA) published data that included new statistics on the number of animals that were slaughtered for religious purposes without being stunned in England and Wales. This is the first time that data on this issue has been collected since 2015 and it suggests a significant increase. We're very concerned about this.
